Introducing Dawn Everhart: A Southern Cooking Extraordinaire

Dawn Everhart, a native of Mississippi, has been immersed in the world of Southern cooking since childhood. Growing up in a home filled with the aroma of smoked meats, freshly baked cornbread, and simmering pots of collard greens, Dawn developed an unwavering love for the flavors and traditions of her Southern heritage.

Her journey as a culinary expert began when she decided to share her passion for Southern cooking with the world. Dawn started by hosting small cooking classes for friends and family, and her warmth and expertise quickly garnered attention. Soon, she was invited to participate in local food festivals and even appeared on television cooking shows, making her mark as a respected authority on Down Home Southern Cooking.

The Art of Down Home Southern Cooking

Down Home Southern Cooking is a unique and revered culinary style that embodies the rich history and cultural diversity of the American South. Rooted in southern hospitality and a love for fresh, seasonal ingredients, this cuisine is known for its hearty flavors and comforting dishes.

From fried chicken and collard greens to gumbo and peach cobbler, Down Home Southern Cooking encompasses a wide range of dishes that are sure to leave you craving for more. The use of soulful spices and cooking techniques passed down through generations adds an irresistible depth of flavor to every bite.

One of Dawn Everhart's specialties is her rendition of classic dishes such as shrimp and grits. Her secret to creating the perfect combination of creamy grits, succulent shrimp, and a complex blend of spices lies in sourcing the finest ingredients and infusing them with love and nostalgia.

Dawn's twist on Southern classics doesn't stop at the main course, though. She also brings her imaginative touch to desserts, transforming traditional treats like pecan pie into mouthwatering creations that are nothing short of pure bliss.

In this third installment of Down Home Southern Cooking you'll find all 211 recipes from the first book, all 217 recipes from the second book plus much more. In each chapter there are bonus recipes plus there are 2 bonus chapters that are not contained in either of the first two. All of these 117 bonus recipes will not be published anywhere else, on the web or in another of our books.

As with part one and two, these bonus recipes in this book have come down through both of our families for many generations, some of them reaching back several generations. Some of the recipes are healthy type dishes but this is purely accidental, the motivations for most of them were taste, cost, or available ingredients.

I feel that I should also mention that many of these heirloom recipes have now been converted to Real Measurement: teaspoons, tablespoons, and cups instead of pinches, dashes, and handfuls. A portion of these recipes were first cooked over fire pits, fire places and on wood stoves, these now have burner and oven temperature settings for you convenience as well.

As I have always said, none of these recipes are etched in stone; I want all of you aspiring Southern cooks to feel free to change or modify them to suit your own individual tastes or needs. That's what Southern cooking is all about, putting a meal on the table that you and your family will love to eat. These recipes are great jumping off points, once you gain experience using them, you should be able to start creating your own.
