Have you been invited to a dinner party and can't decide what dish to take?

Have you made potluck-type dinners or appetizers before?

How about some new ideas?

Potluck dinners are a wonderful time to share good food with good friends. Everyone typically brings a dish that they're sharing, and the feast that results can be intriguing and tasty.

Your host should let you know if there is a theme, and it's a good idea for him or her to find out what everyone is bringing, so there aren't many duplicates. If you've attended potluck dinners before, you may have good AND bad memories of them, but most are positive.

Some people mainly attend potlucks in the summer months, and the dishes can be picnic or barbeque favorites. But these parties can be held in the winter months, too, bringing people together with good food and giving them an excuse to get out of doors.

Potluck dinners and parties are sometimes held for school fundraisers, music jams, nonprofit board of director meetings, new moms' groups, and many other purposes. But they can also be held simply to give people a chance to gather and share good food and pleasant conversations and memories.
